Fake Fake Fake Crack is a fake anti-virus program designed to trick users into thinking they are using a legitimate anti-virus program. It is a variant of Zbot and dates back to at least March 2008, when Symantec first detected it, and was first seen under the name NetGlider. While NetGlider was not as sophisticated as Fake Fake Fake, it maintained a persistent rootkit that allowed it to survive disk format changes and reinstallation. Fake Fake Fake was first discovered by Symantec in March 2008 under the name NetGlider, and has been active up until December 2018. It is difficult to remove, even with anti-virus programs installed, as it is able to restore itself after each removal and can still be activated without an anti-virus program installed. It is distributed as a trojan horse that usually arrives as an email attachment pretending to be a Microsoft Office document. When the user opens the file, they are prompted with a dialog box claiming that their computer has been compromised and requires an upgrade to avoid further problems. The offer of a free upgrade is false, as the program cannot be removed without first removing the files that are necessary to reinstall it. Any attempts to remove this trojan or reinstall Windows also end up reinstalling Fake Fake Fake. Even after reformatting the drive, it will still be active, showing an unchanged window on Windows 7 even after multiple updates have been applied.

Anti-Malware . Computer antivirus software is designed to prevent malware from infecting a computer through various methods.
